A few words about Maryvale Institute

Maryvale Institute seeks to live out the vision and desire of Blessed John Henry Newman from his first home as a Catholic, Maryvale House. This vision of an educated laity is one very dear to the hearts of all the staff at Maryvale. Blessed John Henry Newman wrote that the key element in education is the formation of the heart – and not simply the informing of the mind. Cor ad cor loquitur (the heart speaks to the heart) was his motto.

Newman saw that the heart needs transforming, so that knowledge can be embraced and channelled in a way that would not only be beneficial to the individual and to society generally, but would also be instrumental in preparing for our eternal destiny. Without the transformation of the heart, mere increase of knowledge could lead to greater selfishness and evil, and moral corruption.

It is this transformation of heart which forms the Maryvale courses as they seek to feed all the four aspects of the Christian life (Acts 2:42) and lead students to the living wellsprings of faith.
